ABOUT MARTINE

Professionally and personally, Dr. Martine Alonso Marquis strives for a more inclusive world—one where leaders, teams, and individuals embody mindfulness, integrity, and courage. Her journey bridges international relations, leadership coaching, and relationship coaching, reflecting her belief that transformation is possible at every level.

A former political advisor at the European Parliament with a Ph.D. in International Relations, Martine has navigated complex political environments and understands the impact of values-driven leadership. Born in Canada to a European family and having lived in seven countries, she connects easily across cultures, strengthening her empathy and resilience.

As Co-Head of Training at key2advance, Martine designs and delivers workshops tailored to professionals and academics. She is also a certified coach in Conscious Uncoupling and Calling in 'The One,' guiding individuals through the challenges of separation. With a blend of self-inquiry, mindset shifts, and neuroscience-based techniques, she helps clients break free from limiting patterns, build healthy relationships, and cultivate deeper emotional well-being.

Q&A

1) How did you get involved in key2advance?

I first became involved with key2advance after meeting Mona at a conference in Paris while I was a senior fellow at Humanity in Action. We formed a very good connection immediately, and soon found myself providing workshops while working at the European Parliament before taking over her position running the coveted internship programme.

2) What experience do you bring to the community?

I have had the privilege to coach and train hundreds of leaders from all sectors, from corporations to the public sector. My background and experience in politics allows me to fully grasp complex work environments where leaders are expected to show high levels of emotional intelligence and excellent communication skills.

I am also trained in the performing arts, which helps me construct workshops around communications with impact and public speaking by incorporating voice coaching and body exercises into my trainings. I lived in 7 different countries and am multi-lingual, which allows me to understand and connect with very diverse audiences.

3) What value does coaching and training bring to your clients?

Coaching is about being able to take the necessary step back and see challenging situations from a different perspective, opening up to new ideas and new possibilities of the self. It's also about having someone to support you along that journey so you can open up the realm of possibilities. Self-acceptance is very important to me. I work with top notch professionals who are very demanding of themselves and their environment - which often means they can be quite harsh to themselves. How can you learn to accept yourself: your strengths, your weaknesses and your failures, so that you can find contentment and acceptance, so you can thrive.

4) How do you work with your clients to ensure the perfect session?

I want to make sure I have an accurate understand of the environment: the audience, what does their work look like, the challenges they are facing, why do they think its important to receive this particular training, etc. Ideally there's a lot of exchange between myself and the client as I really want to make it relevant to the client so they feel its personalised and tailored to their needs.

5) What's your favourite part of being part of the key2advance community?

So many favourite parts! The best is being around people who are so inspiring, full of capacity and extremely generous about sharing with one another. I learn a lot from my colleagues: we teach each other, train each other and support one another. We're all highly skilled professionals who believe in human value and have an open heart.
